EED 390/Methods of Teaching Secondary English

1 course unit

(every semester)

Prerequisites: LNG 201 or 202, SED 224, EFN 299 and junior/senior standing

Co-requisites: SED 399 and SPE 323

This course will serve as an introduction to various theoretical and methodological approaches to the teaching of middle and high school English. Specifically, the course will focus on the teaching of reading and provide information on how to assess secondary students' reading needs, improve students' comprehension, develop developmentally appropriate, content-rich and standards-based curricula, and foster students' engagement in and ownership of their reading experiences.

EED 391/Independent Study in English Education

variable course units

(by arrangement)

EED 400/Teaching Writing

1 course unit

Recommended to be taken after EED 390 and prior to student teaching.

This course will serve as an introduction to various theoretical and methodological approaches to the teaching of middle and high school English. Specifically, EED 400 will focus on the teaching of writing and provide information on writing with and about literature, implementing writing workshops, crafting developmental and holistic writing assessments, and negotiating standardized tests.

EED 450/ Content Exam

0 course units

Prerequisite: junior/senior standing

This course is a zero-credit, pass/fail requirement for junior English Secondary Education majors, who must demonstrate their knowledge of literature in a proctored and timed examination consisting of multiple essays. Students who earn an unsatisfactory score on one or more of the essays will receive an "IP" in the course and be registered for the course in the subsequent semester. In accordance with college policy on repeating courses, EED 450 may be repeated only once without permission of the chair. Receiving a passing grade in EED 450 is not a requirement for graduation.
